Projects

- Microbial cellulose production from bacteria isolated from rotten fruits.
  Microbial cellulose is an extracellular polysaccharides produced by some microbial genera such Azatobactor, Acetobactor , Agrobacterium , Gluconobactor, Rhizobium, Achromobactor, etc. It represents alternative to plant derived cellulose for some specially application in the medical field and food and other industries. Members of gluconobactor species are the most potential producers compared to other strains. So here I kept some rotten fruits from which I isolates various strains of gluconobactor species and kept it for production of cellulose to see yielding capacity of various strains of gluconobactor.
